

Topic 1: Addressing Displacement Due to Natural Disasters

Natural disasters, exacerbated by climate change, are increasingly displacing millions of people worldwide. Floods, hurricanes, wildfires, and other extreme weather events force communities to flee their homes, creating urgent humanitarian challenges. Addressing displacement due to natural disasters requires coordinated international efforts to provide immediate relief and develop long-term strategies for prevention, preparedness, and recovery. This topic invites delegates to explore comprehensive approaches to support displaced populations, including improving early warning systems, strengthening disaster response mechanisms, and facilitating safe and sustainable resettlement. How can the global community enhance its capacity to protect and assist those displaced by natural disasters, and what measures can be implemented to reduce future displacement risks?

Topic 2: Refugee Protection in Conflict Zones

Conflict zones around the world continue to generate staggering numbers of refugees, fleeing violence, persecution, and human rights abuses. Ensuring adequate protection for refugees in these volatile environments is paramount to upholding their rights and dignity. This topic invites delegates to examine the challenges faced by refugees living in conflict zones, including access to basic necessities, security concerns, and legal vulnerabilities. Discussions will center on strengthening humanitarian response mechanisms, enhancing cooperation with host countries and international organizations, and promoting durable solutions for refugee populations. How can the international community better protect and support refugees in conflict zones, and what strategies can be implemented to address the root causes of displacement and conflict?
